NEW YORK, NY -- (Marketwire) -- 04/09/12 -- The investment environment is bleaker than it was last year for silver enthusiasts. Angelos Damaskos, chief executive of Sector Investment Managers, observed "Now we are back to the normal situation, where silver behaves much more like industrial metal. Investors are no longer looking at it as a safe-haven asset," and going on further to say "It will probably underperform for a good few years." "There are two issues that in the short term suggest we are not going to head back towards $50," Mitsui Precious Metals strategist David Jollie said. "One is that margins on Comex are still higher than they were last year, so investors are going to have to come back in more weight to drive the price further." He added, "At the same time, silver turnover on the Shanghai Gold Exchange is relatively low compared to where it was last year."
